ANALYSIS: Worsening energy crisis adds impetus to Nigeria's legislative reforms

Hopes are growing in Nigeria that – after more than a decade of legislative logjams – laws could soon be finalised to help resolve what even the government acknowledges is a “full-blown energy crisis”.

Despite its 180 million population, Nigeria's grid-delivered electricity supply is only 3-4 GW – barely enough to supply a city the size of Rome. The country only functions at all because ...
